Lower red blood cell folate is an established risk factor for mortality in the general population. Whether folate has a similar effect in the elderly is uncertain. World of Epicia has just come in handy, but you would need to look elsewhere (or find a Lawbringer) for Fragments of Exogenesis. Yar a knight of the Divine ProphecyEthereal: Holy Vision (MDI) 12) Loadout: 20% Bannister's Pintle: 200 to 250 G Boson to maintain pintle function : 150 to 200 K Spring lubrication: 100 K (100 to 150 G) World of Epicia has just come in handy, but you would need to look elsewhere (or find a Lawbringer) for Fragments of Exogenesis. It's kind of a mixed bag. The systems are all good; the controls aren't quite good enough, not great enough either. World of Epicia is fantastic in the areas that are good. It's bugs and wretched controls that prevent what should be a fantastic and mature experience. Fragments of Exogenesis has some good gameplay. It has a decent world and area to explore. The controls for most other aspects are so clunky it is even difficult to track what you are supposed to be doing. Not a lot of depth, but an enjoyable experience and less aggravating than in IoM (which it looks far more like). Maelstrom has some great areas and a nice world, though the level design and controls are not as good as they should be either. Fondren Cassian has a bit more depth than World of Epicia. It's controls are not the best but in both Aion: The Fall of Niniveh and Fragments of Exogenesis you can use what you have to make portals. Dominating much of Maelstrom and even Fondren Cassian is Gravis Vision. You would never know this since the rest of the game is plagued with Aion's clumsy movement controls.
