A buyer enquired with my post concerning a program he would need to use to recover files from a broken micro USB drive. I am not in the business of wrecking hard drives and seeing them fail and the resulting customer relations disaster that would likely ensue, for this very reason. A usb stick, due to its small size, usually does not suffer the same degree of data corruption that a magnetic hard disk drive will, but the little devils DO have a propensity to fail. Older models of USB drives have a set of anti-static snap-rings and it appears that the USB cable of the drive also has static-dissipating connectors. Thus, a worn/broken USB cable is a natural cause of data corruption in older models. Data corruption issues are not always specific to the USB device, but to an individual application. Even the system can be at fault due to a failed hard drive or problems with the USB port. Totally agree with your post. Thanks for your valuable advise and answer. When I initially commented I clicked the "Notify me when new comments are added" checkbox and now each time a comment is added I get four emails with the same comment. Is there any way you can remove people from that service? Thanks a lot! I have been surfing online more than 3 hours today, yet I never found any interesting article like yours. It's pretty worth enough
