Beast Trojan 2.06 Free Download [NEW]

mbg 08-01-2011, 01:30 PM Hi guys, I have a backup (and a recent backup) of my /home/user folder. I haven't done anything with the partitions yet. I want to restore everything I used to have in /home/user. I have the date of the backup. I want to be able to restore from the time I started having the problem. So my problem is, if I download a sytem with the same version of linux as my machine has, would there be some sort of conflict? If I start having the same problems would it be a good idea to download ubuntu (or any other linux distro)? I think I have had same problem with ubuntu before, because I haven't had a stable system for a long time... The problem is that I have all my data in /home/user (all the "linux" stuff) the only thing I can download in the time from the earlier backups is the linux stuff, so I can't use that. (since the linux stuff is larger than the home dir, it is impossible to fit everything on a cd) Using ubuntu is a good idea, for me... I will figure out how to take files from my machine, or read from my other backup again (I have another luks drive...) and then install ubuntu, and then I would just download all the files (all the files, I have no idea what was stored when I was using the system) and just copy them to the ubuntu's home dir. I am a little nervous, because I don't really know how to reinstall linux, I use "start a new system" instead of "install ubuntu") and reinstall linux... Help! gohto 08-01-2011, 01:30 PM Hi there, You should be fine. You need the exact files your original system has. So if you are using Linux, it is best to download the Ubuntu installation ISO file. You will find a copy of the ISO file in /media/http/g/ubuntu-10.04.1-desktop-i386.iso. Once you download the ISO file, a live CD/DVD can be made from it. Once you boot from that live CD/DVD, you are free to copy whatever files you want from your original system.
